

Press release - April 19, 2017

Opus Inspection welcomes Sandra McCulloch as new CEO

Lothar Geilen, CEO of Opus Group, announced Sandra McCulloch as the new CEO of Opus Inspection on April 1, 2017. Sandra is a results oriented executive with 30 years of global automotive experience, and a diversified background in senior management. She has held senior management roles at Delphi, General Motors, and CAMI Automotive. She has earned a Master of Science in Management from Stanford University and a Bachelor of Science in Metallurgical Engineering from Queen's University.

"I am particularly gratified that an executive as qualified as Sandra has agreed to join our organization at this critically important juncture in our development," said Lothar Geilen. "Her technical background and entrepreneurial spirit in combination with her highly successful executive management career are the perfect combination to lead Opus Inspection into our next level of growth and prosperity."

"I am honored to have been chosen to lead Opus Inspection into our new growth phase. With the talented people and innovative technology within Opus Inspection, I am convinced that our team has the tools and ability to deliver on our five-year business plan. This is an incredibly exciting time to be joining this dynamic team," said Sandra McCulloch. "It's inspiring to know that I will be part of a team that is focused on making the world a cleaner and safer place."

Ms. McCulloch fills the position left open when Mr. Geilen assumed the role of CEO of Opus Group, and is strengthening the management team as part of the corporate growth plan presented on February 14. The plan includes expansion into new markets and strategic acquisitions, with the goal of doubling Opus' revenue in five years.
